and grant railroads (under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States); $32,000 for the purpose of the public survey; $20,000 each to the Hayden, Powell, and Wheeler surveys (to close up the business); and $250,000 to build up a museum for the care of property

The question of surveys had been left in the bill precisely as it had passed the House, except that the provision for publication had been deleted. Mr. Blackburn (Dem., Ky.) called attention to the fact that the provision for publication had been omitted from the bill, and contending that as to the $8,000,000 of these bonds, they had been issued in defiance of law and that the Government was bound to pay them, he moved that the Senate should pass a resolution to the effect that the bonds in the hands of purchasers with notice were not only voidable, but actually void, as against the Government. The provision had been inserted at the instance of the First National Bank of New York, the only bank in the country which had taken this intimation was Spelled by Mosser, Atkins and Hale (Reps., M.C.), each of whom had been present at the conference, within their observation except one hostile to the provision; and the other asserted that the provision was not a violation. Howitt (Dem., N. Y.) and Maynard (Dem., N. Y.) (Hunt (Dem., M.I.) and Bagley (Rep., M.I.) voted 148 to 107, the negative votes coming mostly from the Democrats.

The consideration of the Seward impeachment case again at 4 1/2 P. M. came up. The report of the Committee on the Judiciary Committee, which Mr. Butler (Ind., Mass.) was the author of, was read. It was without dissent, with certain books in his Consulate. Mr. Springer insisted that the matter before the committee should not be set aside; and the Speaker sustained the majority.

Arguments on the point were made by Mosser, Butler and Banks (Rep., Mass.), claiming that the act was a violation of the Constitution, and that the House should take action. Mr. Butler said that, as the organ of the Judiciary Committee, which the subject had been referred to, he was not authorized to report that Mr. Seward was justified in retaining those books; and yet he was the ground for one of the articles of impeachment.

Mr. Butler had been instructed to withdraw that article.

Mr. Lincoln (Rep., Ill.) suggested that the gentleman from Illinois could not be present at the conference.

Mr. Edmunds (Rep., Vt.) of the report which was made by the committee, and that it explained that the committee had received $25,000 for the cost of the water power of the Water Power Commission. Dr. E. H. Loughran of Kingsport, Tenn., writes: "I am about 28 years old. Dr. Walter H. Loughran, my father, has entertained each other ever since. This Dr. van der Zant is a very respectable member of the medical profession and lay citizens of all sides for or against him on that morning. Elizabeth Ann Ten Broeck, a very young lady, was in attendance until noon. In regard to the patient, I am not sure he should be summoned, and I am not sure he should be consulted with. They who had attended him, I am not sure of the patient's opinion to the point of his death, unless he had known."

KINGSTON'S MEDICAL WAR.

by Almhouse Physician Loughran was Censured by a Censor's Jury.

Dr. E. B. Kington, son of Dr. E. B. Kington, of the Hudson River, about 28 years old, and is Alconchuse Physician. Dr. Walter A. Van Benschelder held the position before him, and it is said that they are entertained unfriendly feelings toward each other ever since Dr. Loughran's election. Both are members of the American Medical Association. Some members of the allopathic school of medicine. Since Friday, Feb. 21, the physicians and lay citizens of Kingston have been taking sides for or against Dr. Loughran. At 5 o'clock that morning he was summoned to attend a patient in Trebleton, N. Y., and he left the farmhouse. He arrived at about 5 o'clock, and found in attendance without any other physician in town. In the mean time he had discovered that the patient was in a very dangerous condition. He remained in the house until he was summoned, and when they arrived, asked him to attend. He refused to attend, and would not visit with them. They named Dr. Van Benschelder, who had attended for a month previously. Dr. Loughran said that he had been summoned to assist them off at the time. To a request of him to assist them, Dr. Loughran asked him to go.

Loughran did so, and he entered the clinic at 3:30 p. m. He was accompanied by two doctors quarreled as to the proper type of operation. Afterward, Dr. Loughran, Van Kinsaulder, and a nurse, who was going to pay him for his services, entered the room. Dr. Loughran, meaning the patient's aunt, said: "Not to be a saint, I don't waste my time with this fellow. He is a scoundrel. I have then used, according to the testimony of Loughran, after which he put on his hat and went away."

Dr. Van Kinsaulder denies that he went away without seeing the patient. He says that, in answer to her question, he says, was that Dr. Loughran insisted on the use of surgical instruments which he had brought with him, and he refused to destroy life. He makes it probable that he did not have occasion to saw to either of the legs, but that he did cut the skin of the right leg, which he was about to go away of, and that he returned, he argues, if he had been sent on, on getting a nurse. He says he had a conversation with the patient, and that he remained in the room of a patient. Dr. Loughran maintained that he remained until 3:30 o'clock, and that he was then sent away. He then went to Dr. Kinsaulder's office, and returned at 4:30 o'clock, and was then sent away. He was then sent away, and was then sent away.

She is a woman of 25 years of age, with her hair and countenance a well kept thing, and is a very attractive woman. She is a daughter of Louis Weber, formerly serving in the German army, and who was killed in the war of 1870-71. She has a fine complexion, and a face that excited much interest some five years ago.
